Saturday, probably rain

HOPKINSVILLE KENTUCKY, SATURDAY, JANUARY 27, 1917.

VOL. 39—No. 12

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

The river Aa is the latest one to be discovered by the war correspondents.

Fount Kremer, of Louisville, was elected Secretary of the State Fair by the State Board of Agriculture at Frankfort.

An earthquake Wednesday on the Island of Bali, Malay Archipelago, killed 50 natives and destroyed 1,000 houses.

The State revenues are running behind $60,000 a month and there are millions of interest-bearing warrants. There must be relinchment as well as tax revision.

The British government has refused permission to the Hatfield Limited to proceed with work on the contract for shells for the American navy, "so long as the exigencies of war continue."

A woman presided as speaker over the Oregon house of representatives Wednesday for the first time. Speaker Robert N. Stanfield retired shortly after the session opened and turned the gravel over to Mrs. Alexander Thompson, a representative. She occupied the chair until noon.

The most severe cold of the present winter is gripping central and northern Europe. The German newspapers report 34 degrees of frost Fahrenheit (4 degrees below zero) in east Prussia and several deaths from cold. Railroad difficulties have been increased by frost broken rails and wheels.

DELAYED IN CADIZ

Road Commissioner Rodman Wiley Here Short While Yesterday Afternoon.

A meeting at the courthouse yesterday afternoon was interfered with by the failure of Road Commissioner Rodman Wiley to arrive at the time appointed. He was in Cadiz and came through in a buggy, but did not arrive until after three o'clock. The crowd that had assembled had mostly dispersed and only a few were on hand. Mr. Wiley came to discuss the federal aid law and road matters in general.

Mr. Settle was a storekeeper-gauger in the United States internal revenue service, under Collector T. Scott Mayes. He was appointed in 1914. Previous to his connection in the Federal service here, Mr. Settle practiced law in Owensboro, and Little Rock, Ark., and was a newspaper man and advertising specialist in addition to being connected with hardware concerns.

FIGHTING IN ZERO COLD

Fiercest Operations Now on The Russian Battle Line.

GERMANS TAKE TRENCHES And 1714 More Prisoners Southwest of Riga.

The big battle between the Germans and Russians over the frozen Tirulmarsh southwest of Riga continues unabated. Further progress for the Germans along both sides of the Aa river is reported by Berlin, which claims an advance over a front of about six miles and the capture of Russian positions together with fourteen officers and 1,714 men and thirteen machine guns.

Petrograd admits that southeast of the river Russian troops had to fall back a third of a mile, but says the attacks by the Germans on the marsh were repulsed.

Aside from this battle, the fighting in the various other theaters continues to be carried out mainly by the artillery and small reconnoitering and raiding parties. In Rumania the extremely cold weather has virtually put an end to the operations for the moment.

Lively fighting has taken place on the famous "dead man hill" in the Verdun region of France, but no details of it have been made public.

The British labor conference at Manchester by a vote of more than 3 to 1 has gone on record as being against an immediate offer of peace proposals. The following official communication was issued in London:

"In view of the repeated allegations in German official communications, it is necessary to state again quite clearly that no British vessel engaged in the fight on the morning of Tuesday was rammed by an enemy ship or in any way damaged other than the torpedo boat destroyer reported sunk after being torpedoed."

COL. KILLED IN WRECK

Toronto, Ohio, Jan. 26.—Col. William Campbell McDonald was instantly killed and a score of others were injured when a light engine backed into a troop train carrying 500 soldiers as it was leaving the Union station here.

Four Brothers Die.

Greensburg, Ind., Jan. 26.—With the death at Napoleon early Wednesday of Martin Feeney, 66, of Oklahoma, the last of four brothers had died within two weeks. Two weeks ago, Mr. Feeney's three brothers, Charles, Hugh and Michael, died of pneumonia within a few hours, and he came to attend the triple funeral and was stricken with the same disease.

Leak Probe Postponed.

To give stock exchange brokers time to produce records of the dealings of their customers during the time the international peace situation was a factor in the stock market, the Rules Committee of the House suspended its "leak" inquiry and returned to Washington for a week.

BEARDED WAR LIONS

Are Headed For Home With Surprises For Their Friends.

Lieut. Lawson B. Flack has returned from El Paso, Tex., on a month's leave of absence on account of the death of his father, Mr. E. M. Flack. Mrs. Flack, who had been with him, also came. Lieut. Flack still has his left temple disfigured by the remains of a huge carbuncle that was in full bloom on Christmas day, and made his Christmas a memorable one. Like all of the other boys Lieut. Flack is thoroughly worn out with the routine of camp life and is hoping that his regiment may be ordered home before he has to return.

He brings the news that whiskers are very much in evidence in Company D. Capt. Ben Winfree, who is still at El Paso, has turned out a Van Dyke beard and will need an introduction to his best friends when he gets back. Capt. Henry Stites is still sporting the Hughes face decoration that he was threatening to turn out when he left, except that the Texas climate has agreed with it and it has taken on a semi-tropical growth.

But here comes the greatest surprise of all. Lieut. Alvin Clark has turned out a flowing red beard that reflects the rays of the Texas sun with a brilliancy equal to Dr. Isbell's burnside.

Even Lieut. Col. Bassett has caught the bearded fever and a group picture brought home shows him with a very German looking moustache a la von Hindenburg.

MEASLES ON ALL SIDES.

The epidemic of measles is prevalent not only in the city but in many places in the county. In Trigg county many country schools have shut down temporarily and over in Stewart county, Tenn., many entire families have the disease. In this city about 40 warning notices have been posted. The disease is in a mild form and some grown ups have it. Schools have not been interfered with.

CAPT. STITES IN CHARGE.

The three companies ordered from El Paso reached Louisville Thursday night, where they will be several days waiting to be mustered out. The Paducah Sun noted the passage through that city, saying:

"Captain Henry J. Stites is in charge of Company D. Capt Stites is also in charge of the battalion.

The troops who passed through this morning are all happy and strong and seemed to have suffered no ill effects from their long vigil on the Rio Grande. Some of them seemed sorry they were going back.

Capt. Stites is a brother of Attorney John Stites of this city. He is a prominent attorney at Hopkinsville and went to the border with the troops last September. Attorney Stites met the troop train at Union Station this morning and held a chat with his brother.

Newspaper Man Killed

He is the oldest engineer in years on the division and has for many years been engaged in the pension services and his home is in Evansville.

OPENS WAY FOR SENATE ATTACK

Senator Borah Introduces Resolution to Reaffirm Doctrine of No Alliances.

FORESTALL DISCUSSION Leaders See No Reflection on President Wilson's Peace Address in Resolution.

Washington, Jan. 26.—Ground work of the expected attack in the senate on President Wilson's proposal that the United States join a league for peace was laid today in a resolution introduced by Senator Borah reaffirming as a national policy the doctrine of no entangling alliances laid down by Washington and Jefferson.

Unlike the pending Cummins resolution, Senator Borah's proposal makes no direct reference to the president's peace address, but its adoption would commit the senate in all matters coming before it touching the interest or affairs of foreign countries to conform its acts to those time honored principles "so long and so happily a part of our own policies."

There was no debate on the resolution, but after its introduction democratic members of the foreign relations committee went into conference and made plans to forestall discussion of the matter on the floor before the committee has considered.

PROPOSED NO DEPARTURE.

The democrats insisted that the president had proposed no departure from national traditions and that there is nothing in the resolution to reflect on his utterance. Some leaders even predicted that if the resolution came to a vote every democrat would support it, but they declared discussion was useless and would disrupt senate business.

DEATH OF MISS OLIVE JOHNSON

Niece of Mrs. T. J. McReynolds Passes Away in Nashville.

Miss Olive M. Johnson died at St. Thomas Infirmary in Nashville Wednesday night, having been taken there from Franklin, Tenn., where she had been with her sister. Miss Johnson lived several years with her aunt, Mrs. T. J. McReynolds, occupying a position in the Planters' Bank & Trust Co. Three years ago she went to Louisville to accept a position with the Avery Company, which she held until failing health caused her to go to her sister's home at Franklin. She was taken to Nashville for an operation, but it was too late to attempt it, her condition having become hopeless. Miss Johnson was 26 years old and a young lady of many attractions and a charming personality. "She was a member of the Baptist church. Interment was at Franklin, Tenn.

DEATH OF YOUNG LADY.

Miss Alberta Lane died near Sinking Fork Thursday. Death was due to heart disease. The deceased was in her seventeenth year and was born in Wyoming. The interment took place at the Brick church yesterday.

Circus Wagons Again.

The United States Circus corporation has contracted for the immediate delivery of one hundred automobile trucks, which it will use henceforth in lieu of trains or wagons. This is simply an initial order for experimental purposes, but President Frank P. Spellman, of the circus corporation, believes that the result will warrant the transportation of all his company's attractions behind automobile units.

CITY OF PARIS TENNESSEE

Is Pleased With a System of Revenue Paying Public Utilities.

Mayor A. B. Scates, of Paris, Tenn., has issued a statement relative to the municipally owned light and water plants. He says:

For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1915, the gross revenue from the water and light was $39,390.26; net $16,676.48.

For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1916, the gross earnings were $36,858.78; net, $14,295.62.

For the nine months ending December 31, 1916, the gross earnings were $30,715.80; net, $12,541.01.

Our plant stands the city $122,000. It attach hereto our rate sheet for lights, also motor driven machines and our water rate sheet.

Our tax rate is $1 per hundred, and our valuation is not to exceed one half the value of the property.

Were it not for the money that the city gets out of the water and light plant, I venture the assertion that the tax rate would not be less than $2, instead of $1.

We receive from taxes and ad valorem between $14,000 and $16,000, and it costs us $28,000 to $29,000 per year to run the city.

SCHEDULE OF RATES.

Residence rates—Minimum rate, $1 per month; per KW 8c, meter rent, 25c per month; bill from $6 to $10, 5 per cent discount; bill from $10 to $15 10 per cent discount; bill from $15 to $20, 15 per cent discount; bill $20 and over, 20 per cent discount.

Power rates—Minimum rates, $1.50 per month—Under 100 KW, 5c per KW; 101 to KW, 4 1/2 c per KW. 201 to 300 KW, 4 1/4 c per KW; 301 to 500 KW, 4c per KW; 501 to 700 KW, 3 3/4 c per KW; 701 to 1,000 KW, 3 1/2 c per KW. 1,001 to 2,000 KW, 3c per KW; over 2,000 KW, 2 1/2 c per KW.

All accounts for electric current, including all residences and commercial lighting 10 per cent. discount if paid before the 5th of the month.

Nearly all water rates are flat rates. Meter rates, maximum 15c per 1,000 gallons; minimum, 9 cents per 1,000 gallons. Minimum rate per month $1.

PLEASED WITH DR. HULSE.

The people of Cadiz and Trigg county have seldom had the opportunity to hear abler sermons than those preached by Rev. T. L. Hulse, of Hopkinsville, the Methodist Presiding Elder of this district. He held quarterly meeting at several points in the county last week, and on Sunday night occupied the pulpit in the Methodist church in Cadiz. Inclement weather did not prevent a large crowd from being present, although services were held at other churches in town, and the sermon was one of the most able of the number of splendid sermons he has delivered in Cadiz during the past two years. The Church of God will make more rapid strides and the world will become better more rapidly when more men of the mental caliber of T. L. Hulse devote more of their talents to it.—Cadiz Record.

ANOTHER BIG WEEK

And Tobacco Money Is Now Oiling The Wheels of Trade.

DAILY INFLUX HELPS ALL Prices Still Soaring and Deliveries Exceed a Million Pounds.

With fine weather and the market on a boom greater than ever, the tobacco business has been very active this week. Heavy deliveries have been made on contracts and the loose floors have had a very busy week. Prices have been very strong and the money turned loose from day to day has quickly found its way into the channels of trade and the city is enjoying a period of unexampled prosperity. Buyers who bought early have profited greatly by the big advance since last fall. There is some complaint of contracts being jumped or only partly filled, and there are indications that there will be more or less litigation growing out of the rise in prices since the market opened.

The following are the official quotations:

ENLIGHTENMENT

By EDNA SAWYER.

Barbara Wharton knew from the first that there was not the slightest excuse for it. The second time she had met him she had known of his marriage, yet to the strangely reserved, cautious little girl there was something dangerously attractive in Jerome Towne's keen eyes and graying temples. She yielded to his requests for her time whenever he could make an opportunity to visit the town, and treasured the notes, penned in a tiny, almost feminine hand, that reached her frequently, carefully guarding this, her first "affair," from parents and neighbors.

Time and again she pondered upon the emotion that would follow discovery of the intimacy. As one wholly unconcerned she pictured the resentful anger of the town. She, the pride of all the neighborhood, had stooped to a silly flirtation with a man old enough to be her father—she, whose family flourished upon years of self-satisfied esteem.

Because her mother was a mother there was no need to tell her. She knew of several moonlight strolls in which the city man had joined her pretty daughter. She recalled the dancing eyes and rapidly crimsoning cheeks when, feigning need of information as to his rose bushes, Mr. Towne had on several occasions sought their home. Barbara had at first been hearty in her avowed admiration of the striking, well-groomed man. With secret annoyance her mother had noted the gradual discontinuance of the frank comments.

A note, written the day before, fullen from its envelope, caught Mrs.
Wharton's eye as she rummaged in her sewing table, and she picked it up, discussing the city man's handwriting.
She read the delicate lines twice through.

"Dearest of Girls—I'm sorry; I can't see you today. But Tony will bring you this, and tomorrow I shall meet you at the station and take you up to the city with me for the day. We'll see a matinee and have dinner at Colmer's. Can you, will you manage it?
Remember, I shall be waiting. Hopefully,
J. T."

Mrs. Wharton dropped her sewing, crumpled the little note in her fingers and started out, down the winding road. Somehow, Barbara seemed very old, very capable, all at once—was there nothing to be done? One couldn't order a twenty-two-year-old daughter to stay at home. And then Mr. Whitton's tall, square frame came into view as he moved about his rose bushes, and mother caught her breath with a little gasps. She formed a plan.

"You don't mind if I go up to the city on the noon train, mother?"

Barbara was wiping glasses after breakfast the next morning and she didn't look up as she made the query.
"I'd like to match the ribbon for my dress, and—and—I want to go mother!"

"If you think best, dear," Mrs. Whitton tried to catch Barbara's eyes, and failed. Barbara went through into the dining room and returned, slowly. And her mother put up a quick hand and brushed something from her cheek.

"Mother! Why, there's something the matter! You're sick!" Two strong arms whirled the little gray-haired woman to the light. "Mother,
what is it?"

"Nothing that I can't tell you some other time, dear." Mother sighed softly. "There's no need worry—about me."

"You'll tell me this minute."
"When you come back, dear." Her mother hesitated an instant to gather courage. "I—I can't spoil your trip.
Go and have a good time."

"No, sir." Barbara seated herself on the broad window ledge and braced her shoes with a determined stamp, and mother rejoiced inwardly. "Not one inch do I stir unless you tell me."

Her mother stilled a nervous sob with small success and stammered with the words: "It's daddy," she whispered finally with a backward glance of terror lest the walls should hear.
"Daddy!" Barbara's bewilderment
transfigured her face.

"He's—dear, how can I make you understand—such a little girl. He's growing tired of me, Barbara. He's—I—"

"Mother!" The bewilderment had changed to reproach.

"I think he is interested in somebody else, dear!" Mrs. Wharton finished bravely, with a rush.

"It can't be, mother! You're mistaken. Why, not our daddy, mother?"
"What does it mean, dear, when a man with a wife seeks the company of another woman who is younger and prettier? What can it mean, except—that—the mother sought words to express her emotion, but her tears were mysteriously dried, and she spoke with telling seriousness. "You can't understand, except the woman who sees the man who's shared her life drifting from her, drawn by a thoughtless girl."

"Poor, dear mother! I'll talk to daddy—you leave him to me! But now—oh, mother! I want to go down to the station, for just one minute.
I've got to, dear." And Barbara was gone, breathless.

Mr. Wharton smiled understanding-ly over his wife's head when, five minutes later, Barbara rushed into the kitchen with flaming cheeks and flung a trembling arm about each. Both knew the manner of Jerome Towne's flaming cheeks.

SOME TARIFF FACTS

RECORD OF BOTH GREAT POLITICAL PARTIES.

Republican Claim That Downward Revision Has Adversely Affected the Country's Industries Shown to Be Without Foundation.

In the campaign of 1908, both great parties promised a downward revision of the tariff.

President Taft allowed this pledge to be broken and signed the infamous Aldrich bill—which was a revision upward, not downward, and some of whose schedules he admitted were indefensible.

This breach of faith split the Republican party and started the insurgent movement, which eventually became the Progressive party.

In the campaign of 1912, the Democratic, Progressive and Socialist party platforms all promised downward tariff revision.

These three parties polled 11,314,400 votes, against 3,484,956 for Taft and high tariff. In other words, the vote in favor of downward tariff revision was more than three to one.

The Democratic and Progressive parties together polled 10,412,636 votes, or almost exactly three times as many as were cast for Taft and high tariff.

Under President Wilson's leadership, the Democratic party did exactly what it had promised to do and what three-quarters of the American electorate had voted for—it revised the tariff downward.

There is not the slightest evidence to show that this downward revision of the tariff caused hard times in any degree. Hard times were present when Wilson was inaugurated. The country never had recovered from the Roosevelt panic of 1907, and the big interests which were fighting tariff revision and financial reform did all in their power to keep times hard as a means of regulating political control. They succeeded for a while, but they failed in the end, in spite of the shock caused by the war; and today the country is more prosperous and its prosperity is on a firmer foundation than for more than a dozen years past.

Rural Credits and Prosperity.

It is believed by experts that an era of high interest will follow the cessation of war in Europe, or even appear before the war ends. Europe will need money to rehabilitate itself, and will pay high rates for it. The establishment of the rural credit system in the United States may come just in time to save the farmers of this country from financial stress.

The utilization of the farm lands in the United States up to 60 per cent of their true value will vitalize every business in this country. Real estate, banks, building operations, transportation facilities and every activity of production will expand as a result of the unshackling of the resources of the American farmer.

The year 1917 should be the most prosperous in the history of the United States.

Work Cut Out for Wilson.

On all big international issues Mr. Wilson will find in most instances that the Republican leaders will stand with him, but there are other issues which will necessitate a lengthy and tedious fight before they can possibly be adjudicated. International subjects will logically occupy Mr. Wilson's time at the opening of the session to the exclusion of almost everything else. He must take up the submarine proposition, always vexatious, the restriction of trade on the part of the allies, Britain's attitude on the mails, the possibility of peace and of a world league to enforce it when it comes, and he must deal with Mexico, and it is like dealing with a rat in a trap in this instance.—Memphis Appeal.

Cotton Imports and Tariff.

Under the Wilson tariff for revenue only the 1914 imports instantly become excessive, and many a New Bedford textile man lost his job and walked the street because his product was displaced by cloth or yarn from Europe.—Winthrop L. Murvin of the Home Market club, in a letter to the World.

From the time of the enactment of the Wilson tariff up to the outbreak of the European war there was neither an instant nor an excessive jump in imports of cottons. There was an actual decline in imports of the finer cotton goods in which New Bedford specializes, and practically no increase at all from 1912 in imports of all cotton manufactures.

Vote of Confidence in Wilson.

For President Wilson, however, since he appealed to the country upon his record of public achievement, the victory is veritably a vote of confidence. It is an express approval of his acts, his policies, his administration. No issue was settled, because no issue was raised by Mr. Hughes.—New York Times.

Should Set the Date.

Republican campaign orators predicted that Mr. Wilson's re-election would bring an end to prosperity. It is becoming evident that the orators acted with wisdom in failing to mention the date that hard times are scheduled to arrive.

Dyspepsia.

Eating when in the state of nervous exhaustion or great physical fatigue, prolonged mental strain or excessive grief may be sufficient to cause severe

THE KENTUCKIAN FOR 1917

The Kentuckian on Jan. 1, 1917, rounds out its 38th year. Under normal conditions the year 1916 would have been a year of unusual prosperity, but as the public is aware the exorbitant and unprecedented price charged for News Print Paper cut a deep hole in the profits of all newspapers and many unable to stand losses were put out of business. The Kentuckian enters the new year with print paper that cost $54 ton at this time last year now costing about $140 for the same amount of paper not as good. How long these conditions will continue cannot be foretold.

Many newspapers have advanced rates but in order that the circulation may not be lessened by a higher price the Kentuckian will still be sent for $2.00 a year, the old price. It will be necessary though to adhere rigidly to the cash system, since more than $1.00 must be paid in advance for the paper upon which we print 156 papers and the cost of printing leaves but little profit out of the second dollar. We are asking our old subscribers to stand by us in this crisis by renewing promptly. Advertisers will also be asked to pay a slightly higher rate for space, which is all a newspaper has to sell outside of its subscriptions. We trust the advertising public will see the reasonableness of this step.

All papers not paid for will be Stopped. Don't Let Yours Stop.

The Price Will be the same as heretofore,

THE SUPPLY OF "JOBS."

In a recent number of this publication the statement was made that shorter train runs on the railways would necessarily increase the number of men required in the transportation service, and compel a corresponding withdrawal of men from the productive industries. The idea that anybody should be disturbed over this effect strikes the editor of a newspaper in one of the leading cities of the middle west as most amusing. Commenting upon it he says:

"But it sure does take a New York bank to father the proposition that the creation of more jobs means national calamity."

The fact that this paragraph should appear as editorial comment in a newspaper of large circulation indicates how widespread is the view that the number of jobs is more important than the volume of product. This writer seemingly could not understand how there could be any advantage in accomplishing a given amount of work with six men if 12 men could be employed upon it. Nowhere, in his opinion, outside of a New York bank, could anybody be found who would deliberately sacrifice six jobs in this manner. Presumably he has seen no advantage to the public in the vast expenditures that have been made to improve the road beds and increase the motive and carrying power of trains. Indeed, it may be wondered whether he sees any advantage in having railways at all, for it would require a great many more men to transport the freight of the country in wheelbarrows. What a glorious country for "jobs" China must be, where they have practically no labor-saving machinery.

This idea that jobs are of more importance than product, and that the chief problem of society is to provide everybody with a job, instead of to increase the supply of food, clothing and other desirable things, would be ridiculous if it was not so prevalent and so serious an obstacle to industrial progress.

There is a scarcity today of wheat, corn, potatoes, meats, cotton and wool. They are all bringing almost fabulous prices, but the prices cannot increase the supply, except as they may check the movement of young men away from the farms into railroading and other occupations. Wages in the cities can never advance fast enough to keep pace with the cost of living, if the movement from farm to city continues. There is a shortage of labor on the farm. It is made up in part by the use of labor-saving machinery, and what a depressing loss of jobs there was when the self-binder entered the grain fields!

In the last analysis what is wanted is not more jobs, but more things; more grain, more meat, more potatoes, more materials for clothing, more materials for houses, larger and better houses, more comforts in the houses, etc., etc., and there is no hope of supplying these wants except by more efficient industry. Instead of making each job occupy as many workers as possible, we want each man's work to be as productive as possible. If this idea, of the public interest in the multiplication of products, instead of the multiplication of jobs, could be made dominant, industry would be revolutionized. The high cost of living would come tumbling down and the problem how we can keep our factories running after the war would be solved.

We make no argument against the principle of the eight-hour day. We have said that the proper length of the working day is not necessarily the same in all industries; it depends upon the character of the work, and is something to be determined by experience and by fair negotiations. If, as may be true in many instances, the average production is not reduced by cutting down the workday to eight hours, then there is no room for argument about it. If, however, the amount of product, or of service, is curtailed, as must be the case with trainmen under the Adamson law, then the cost is bound to fall upon the rest of the community, and the ques-

THE TWO PASSENGERS

By HAYOLEON S. ZARICK.

Out of the door of a popular gambling hall fled 20 halless, countless figures, and after them came a host of officers of the law, namely, sharp-eyed detectives and shrewd policemen. It was a famous raid. The gamblers had been caught in the act, the gambling devices, some of them valuable, were all confiscated, and the men, except one, were seized after a long run. The one who escaped was Bob Crane, the owner of the hall.

In vain all searched, trying to win the large reward offered for his capture. But he had disappeared, as if off the face of the earth.

But there was one person in the city where the raid occurred who could have told the searchers where Bob Crane was, and that one person was Nellie Hayes. Nellie was a tall girl, with soft brown hair and large, blue eyes. One afternoon after Bob had left the gambling hall to get a light lunch before going back to his evening work, he had decided to take a walk through one of the parks.

While in this park he saw a horse madly running down the long, smooth drive. His heart gave a thump as he saw a girl dashing before the oncoming horse. Bob made a desperate attempt to rescue the girl and succeeded in pulling her away from the danger. This girl was Nellie Hayes, and later, when Bob first met her on the street, nearly a year before the raid, he stopped short to look at her. He then deliberately turned and followed her at a respectful distance to her home on one of the fashionable streets of the town. Time passed rapidly and before long he had made friends with her father, and in an amazingly short time the upper class knew him as the sweetheart of pretty Nellie Hayes.

She knew nothing about him, but just took him on trust, thinking him to be an honest, upright man. Now, when he dodged under the arm of a bluecoated pursuer, and swung another one out of the way with a blow of his big fist, he ran, more from force of habit than anything else, straight in at the half-open door of the Hayes home. Nellie was standing in the hall as he rushed in.

"Bob!" she cried, showing a little excitement in her voice, as she came toward him with her arms outstretched and her eyes plying him. "Oh, what's the matter, dear?"

"Don't, Nellie," he said huskily, as he looked embarrassed into her eyes. "You mustn't touch me now. I don't know what I'm here for anyway, unless it's to tell you the truth. You have put too much confidence in me. Don't look at me that way. I'm not fit for you to touch, nor to look at, nor to think of, Nellie, darling." He choked back a sob before he continued: "I'm a bad man, and the police are looking everywhere for me this minute, but I had to come and tell you first that it's all true—that Bob Crane is a gambler and a sharper, and that his business is to cheat men out of their hard-earned wages. I'm this same Bob Crane," he confessed to the only girl that he had ever loved. "I've been trying to get into something else for your sake lately, dear, but I couldn't seem to and old ways are hard to break. So good-by, Nellie, you'd best forget about me."

"Bob," she hesitated; then she came and laid her hands on his shoulders to gaze into his eyes. "Bob, dear, if I'll get you out of the country and keep them from finding you, will you promise to be a good man as long as you live?"

He caught his breath. "Promise," she urged, as she grasped him by the arm. "I promise," he said solemnly, and then added, "but it's leaving my heart behind me, Nellie, dear."

She did not answer, but crossed the hall and took a small envelope from a table drawer, then came and stood before him again. "Now, listen. From now on, Bob, you're Mr. John Edwards and you're going back to your old home in Ireland. Your rooms and passage were taken last Friday for today's boat. You see, Mr. Edwards, who bought this ticket, is ill, and the doctor said it would kill him to go. His wife brought the ticket here last night and asked me to take it back to the steamship office this morning. So, Mr. John Edwards, I will hire a carriage for you and tonight you'll be safe on your way to the distant land."

She drew away a little as she handed him the envelope; she knew very well what would happen. He looked up in surprise as he opened it. His heart beat faster. "Why, Nellie, there are two tickets here. What does it mean?"

"Mrs. Edwards was going, too, Bob," she replied.

"But what'll I do with them," he inquired as he glanced at her affectionately with a dawning comprehension. "Nellie, oh, Nellie! You don't mean you—you—"

"Of course I am," she said. "Did you think I'd let you go alone?"

A few months later Bob and Nellie landed in the distant country and Bob Crane, the reformed gambler, married Nellie Hayes, the girl who had always been true to him.

Today Bob is manager of Mr. Hayes' foreign office, and is planning to return to America when he has repaid all of the money that he won in the gambling hall.

Milk and Honey

By
Frances Elizabeth Lanyon

(Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman.)

"Do you think you can manage, Mr.—?"

"Jim, ma'am; just plain Jim. Can I manage? I'm a gorer, ma'am, when I'm hungry, but that royal layout stumps me!"

"If you'll stay here and see that no one carries off the trunk, Mr.—James, I'll feel greatly obliged to you," said Priscilla Davis, twenty-four, but sprightly as a girl of sixteen and just as pretty. "You see, I am an old maid."

"Then I'm blind!" declared Jim chivalrously.

"And this is my sister's former home. I'm moving her over to Somerset, and she has notified Mr. Sprague, who roomed here, that the trunk will be left here for him. He will call for it tonight or early tomorrow morning."

"Yes, ma'am, I understand," nodded the accommodating Jim. "Going to ride on the land? Hope you have a smooth journey. Fifty cents, a night's lodging, and milk and honey and a big loaf of home-made bread, all for totting a few pieces of furniture to that wagon—ma'am, you're a princess, and you wouldn't be an old maid, or a young one, either, down where I come from and where they appreciate such qualities and beauty!"

But Miss Davis, blushing, laughing, full of spirit, waved the speaker adieu, and the wagon moved over the hill.

A hardless, unblinking, nature-loving "tramp," the vulgar public called it, Jim had happened along on his wanderings just in time to get a job. He was jolly, without being familiar; he was chatty, without being a bore. He was clean-minded and wide-awake and, old as he was, and shiftless as he was, had the fine sense to discern most estimable qualities in the fair woman who had treated him so kindly.

Dimly Saw Three Men Flitting Before His Vision.

All there was to leave for his supper, she had told him, was a quart bottle of milk, a cake of honey and a loaf of home-made bread. To the feast Jim now applied himself, with appetite and speed.

"It's rich grazing, too rich!" groaned Jim, surfeited at last, and, stretching out on the grass near the front porch, was soon asleep.

Now strange happenings were in the air that rare night of sweet sounds and hazy moonlight. About midnight Jim awoke. The sound of voices disturbed him. Dimly, he saw three men flitting before his vision.

"Nothing but the trunk, eh?" queried one of them.

"That's all; house seems deserted. I've tossed it in with the other plunder. It's a good haul for one night, pals, and Darby ought to be satisfied."

"Say," broke in other tones, "I'm dying of thirst. Can't we find a well about the old place?"

"We'll see. Got a drink, and make for the city," put in a third voice, and the three men disappeared around the house.

"I'm!" muttered Jim, getting to his feet. "They're stealing the trunk. Yes, they've busted the front door open. And there's an automobile out in front. I think I guess the riddle. Drink and be merry, my friends, for you'll have a long, dusty walk before you!"

Jim chuckled as he made for the road, looked over the machine, chugging low and steadily. He took in its mechanism with a practiced eye, for he had once done some chauffeur work. Then he was in the seat. Gr-r-up-ship! It started up like a mettled steed.

Jim had sized up the situation completely. The three men were city thieves on a looting expedition, apparently financed by one Darby. They had stopped at the village, the bait at the house Jim was guarding being merely incidental. Primarily all that Jim cared for was the rescue of the trunk, and so he dashed into the rear seat of the machine and noticed various boxes and bags, he decided that he had done something of real importance in divesting the criminals of their means of transportation and their booty.

Jim had a definite point in view as he whizzed down the smooth country road. He had gathered from what Miss Davis had said, the location of her new home. He had gone about 15 miles when he observed a trim feminine figure coming down the road, clearly silhouetted in the misty moonlight. He slowed down with a jerk and peered forward with a stare.

"I declare!" he shot out briskly.

"Oh, ma'am!—please, it's me."

"Mr. James," warbled up the melodious tones of Miss Davis.

"Yes, ma'am."

"And in an automobile?"

"Borrowed, ma'am—that trunk and all. But you, ma'am?"

"The wagon broke down. It's just ahead. It will have to stay here all night. I was going back to the next village to stay until morning," explained Miss Davis.

"Why not go to your sister's, ma'am?" suggested Jim. "I'm a careful driver, being sober, ma'am. Besides, I want to get to some safe, sure place, for I'm thinking there's a lot of valuable stuff in that back seat of the machine, and we want to protect it."

The eyes of his interested passenger glowed with keen interest as Jim related the story in detail. They expanded to their widest after they reached her sister's home. The trunk had not been opened. In the various boxes and bags they found a great mass of silverware, watches and the like. Obviously some jewelry store in the village had been burglarized.

"I think I guess out just what has happened," observed Jim, "and someone is probably worrying back there at Reedsville. If I may stow the automobile in that shed and sleep in it till morning, then I'll go back my trucks, and see what turns up."

Miss Davis was up and around when Jim awoke. She suggested that they telephone Reedsville. Their call brought back a vivid response. The main jewelry store of the town had been looted the evening previous and nearly five thousand dollars of its contents carried away.

Within two hours Roscoe Woods, a well-appearing, eager and anxious young man, the proprietor of the despoiled store, appeared in an automobile. He was overjoyed at the discovery that the entire plunder was intact. He had just started in business, and his entire capital was invested in the recovered goods. He insisted on pressing $100 on Jim. He selected a dainty brooch and asked Miss Davis to accept it, far, indirectly through her, affairs had come about fortunately for him.

The police followed up the Darby hint. They located him as proprietor of a city gin palace and listed as owner of the automobile. To evade connection with the thieving gang he employed, however, Darby claimed that he had sold the automobile to a party he could not locate, patently a lie, and Jim was left in undisputed possession of the machine.

Very proud was he, in a brand new suit of clothes, seated in his automobile and making a fair living as a taxi servant of the public. He chuckled serenely when he noticed that the young jeweler, Roscoe Woods, came to visit Miss Davis a second time, a third, then regularly.

And one day when he drove Roscoe up to the house, he noticed that his passenger took a look at a beautiful diamond ring, and guessed the natural sequence of affairs.

"You dear man!" said Miss Davis, all afish, as she prettily showed an engagement ring, a few days later, "I hope you never leave us. You have made everybody fortunate and happy all around."

"Me leave!" chuckled Jim, "when finding you has made me quite a nabob! No, indeed—more than ever do I see that I've struck a land flowing with milk and honey!"

"THANK YOU" IN THE STORES

It is a Simple Courtesy That Costs Little and is a Trade Promoter.

A little store "out West" has had a neatly printed message placed upon the wrapping paper and paper bags which it uses—modestly worded, pleasantly phrased, and delightfully frank. It appears under the heading, "Thank You," and reads, according to the Dayton (O.) News:

"We take pleasure in thanking you for your patronage; we believe the goods bought of us today will give you entire satisfaction and that you will come to us again when you need anything in our line. However, if for any reason you are not perfectly satisfied with your purchase, we ask, as a favor, that you report to us at once, and we assure you that we will gladly adjust the matter to your satisfaction. We want you to make this store your store, and if you trade here we shall make it our business to see that whatever you buy is entirely satisfactory."

The fellow who claims that business is a cold-blooded proposition isn't going to succeed in business. The human element still enters as into everything else under the sun. The "thank you" is still potent in trade and we fancy that the merchant who has devised the pleasant card to his customers has done a wonderfully profitable thing, if only he will live up to the promise he makes—and there is no reason to believe that he does not do so.

HOG IS PROFITABLE ANIMAL

Disadvantages of Low Market Prices May Be Overcome by Timely Breeding and Care.

The hog should be a profitable animal. He requires less labor, less equipment, less capital, makes greater gains on 100 pounds of concentrates, reproduces himself faster and in greater numbers, and returns the money faster than any other farm animal. The fact, remains, however, that prices paid for hogs during recent months have been low and discouraging. In spite of these prices the animal that possesses the above advantages can still lift mortgages for his owner if the latter will study and apply some of the fundamental principles underlying the business.

On the average farm there should be radical improvement in breeding and the care of details during farrowing, weaning, etc. There are many complaints throughout the country either of small litters or else a great mortality in pigs. By keeping the production records of sows and selecting from those that produce and raise large average litters a breeder can raise to its most efficient point the size of his litters. This probably runs between seven and eight to the litter. The hog raiser can prevent losses, other than those caused by disease, by providing proper shelter for the sow at farrowing time. The raiser should always cultivate the confidence of his animals by quiet and humane handling; this care and attention in times of necessity will pay big returns.

SHEEP KILLED BY MAGGOTS

Parasites Develop in Clotted Filth in Wool and Work Well Over the Hind Quarters.

Much injury from maggots on sheep is reported this season. In ordinary years these maggots bother only the lambs, especially following docking and castration, when sores are exposed. The maggots develop in the clotted filth in the wool and work well over the hind quarters if not checked. If undisturbed they become so bad that serious injury and death frequently result. Under favorable conditions the maggots develop in 24 hours.

Each sheep should be carefully examined, and enough lysol or some other dip of practically full strength at the first application should be poured on the maggots. Apply as many times as is necessary to be effective. Then examine frequently, and when the maggots are all killed, apply a healing salve so that the skin will keep soft and the wool will grow again.

MARKING SYSTEM FOR LAMBS

Simple Plan Outlined in Illustration Given Herewith—Notches in Ears Indicate Numbers.

This marking system is simple. If you want to mark a lamb as No. 8, make notch in ear where "8" is indicated. The numbers can be combined, as for instance in marking No. 9 where "5" and "4" are marked on the left ear, as shown in the diagram. Supposing the lamb is No. 22, then the right ear is notched at "20" and the left ear at "2."

PROPER CARE OF BROOD SOW

Start Feeding Little Grain About Month Before Breeding Time—Give Oats and Alfalfa.

About a month before breeding time brood sows that have been living on pasture since their pigs were weaned may be started on a little grain.

Oats and finely cut alfalfa fed twice a day in amounts which the sow will readily clean up will put them in good condition for breeding.

Larger and more vigorous litters will be obtained if the sow is in a vigorous condition when bred. She should be gaining in flesh at the time, not fat, but just starting to get fat.

MARRIAGES.

Coleman Jepson.

The secret marriage of Sam B. Coleman, of Elkton, Ky., State Representative from Todd county, to Miss Mary Jepson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Jepson, of Franklin, Ky., was revealed upon the arrival of Mr. Coleman and his bride at Hotel Henry Watterson. The couple were married Monday at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. Sallie H. Vance, at 118 Warren court, Lexington, Ky.

Mr. Coleman's relatives and friends had no intimation of the intended marriage. The bride was believed to have merely gone on a visit to her aunt's home. Mr. Coleman said he wanted to surprise his friends.

The couple will remain in Louisville for several days and will then depart for Elkton, where they will make their home on Mr. Coleman's farm. Mr. Coleman is 35 years old. For ten years he served in the Philippine Islands in the United States engineering corps and during his college career was star tackle on the University of Kentucky State football team.—Courier Journal.

Have You Seen the Fifth Wheel?

This Is a Strong New Weber Wagon Feature

YOU can find the new fifth wheel, the biggest wagon improvement, only on International wagons. We can demonstrate how the Weber fifth wheel makes the best wagon still better.

The famous fifth wheel on the Weber, made of strong, malleable iron, with large wearing surface, does these things: It distributes the strain on the front bolster and sandboard; overcomes pitching of bolster, so preventing bending or breaking of the king bolt; does away with pulling up of front bolster and bending of circle iron.

The top plates of the fifth wheel are widest, so the lower plates are protected and no dirt gets in between. The more you study the merits of this feature, the more you will appreciate its importance.

THINNING FRUIT IS FAVORED

Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station Finds Operation Is Quite Profitable.

(By F. W. FAUROT, Missouri Agricultural College.)

Thinning is an operation that has been practiced to only a very limited extent in Missouri. An occasional man has thinned a few trees, more as a matter of curious inquiry than as a definite orchard practice. Where the operation has to any degree been carefully performed the results have been outstanding, and the Missouri agricultural experiment station finds that it pays well.

Those varieties which tend usually to overbear and produce undersized fruit may be thinned to a profitable advantage. The size and quality of such varieties as Winesap, Missouri Pippin, Ralls and Ingram can almost always be improved by careful thinning, and it will often pay to thin such varieties as Jonathan, Grimes or York.

The quality of well-grown fruit is always superior to that which is small and poorly developed. If the crop is evenly distributed throughout the tree, perhaps four to eight inches, according to size of variety, is a good distance between fruits. Leave only one fruit on a spur. If two are left, both will be wormy. On trees with a heavy set of fruit, thinning all the fruit from part of the spurs tends to cause such spurs to develop fruit buds for the next year's crop, thereby encouraging regular bearing. The earlier the work is done the less drain there is on the vigor of the tree. Surplus fruit can be handled at less expense by thinning than by running it over a sorting table at packing time.

MARKETING THE PEACH CROP

On Account of Its Very Perishable Nature Fruit Must Be Disposed of as Soon as Possible.

The peach, on account of its very perishable nature, must be marketed as soon as possible after reaching maturity, therefore, the proper dispatch and distribution present many difficulties. Peaches will not stand delay, even when graded, packed and handled in the best possible manner. If the grower of apples is not satisfied with the price offered at the time of harvest, he can store certain varieties until the following spring, when prices may be better. Peaches, on the other hand, must be disposed of immediately.

If not already sold when loaded on the cars they must be started at once toward the market, and if they are not sold while en route it is important that they go to a market not already overstocked. An oversupply may occur in one market meaning heavy losses to certain growers, while at the same time consumers may be paying high prices in other localities. It is probable that many smaller towns could serve as carload distributing points if local dealers in these towns would co-operate in buying peaches by the carload and in pushing their sale.

The problem of peach marketing is one of irregular production and of unsatisfactory preparation and distribution rather than of overproduction. The increased consumption of California oranges made possible by effective distribution is an example of results accruing from care in the marketing of a crop of which there is a comparatively uniform supply.

White hellebore is a useful poison to control currant and cabbage worms. An ounce of the powder to three gallons of water is the formula in general use. Just as good a way is to use it dry, mixing an ounce of hellebore with five times as much flour or air-slaked lime or plaster paris.

HEALTHY AND VIGOROUS HOGS

Pasture Furnishes Necessary Exercise in Gathering Succulent Feed—Feed Some Grain.

"Corn for fat and pasture for pork," said a farmer. He meant, says R. C. Ashby, assistant animal husbandman in charge of swine, University farm, St. Paul, that the pasture furnished exercise in gathering the green, succulent feed, and by keeping the hogs healthy and vigorous, it put them in the best condition to make good gains from their grain feed.

It pays to feed grain on pasture, for pasture alone will do little more than keep up a pig's weight. A light to medium grain ration is usually most profitable. About two or three pounds of grain a day is a good ration for shoats weighing eighty to one hundred pounds. If you have scales, weigh your pigs occasionally and feed about three pounds of grain daily for each 100 pounds live weight of hogs.

Good rations for summer feeding are easily obtained. On clover, alfalfa or rape pasture, feed corn and a little skim milk. On blue grass or timothy pasture feed three pounds of skim milk to each two pounds of corn. More milk would do no harm. If skim milk is not at hand, it will pay to feed oil meal or tankage with the corn, where blue grass or timothy pasture is used about one part tankage to eleven parts corn or one part oil meal to seven parts corn.

PRODUCTIVE PERIOD OF EWE

Does Her Best at From Three to Six Years of Age—Keep Her While Teeth Remain Good.

The most productive period of the average ewe's life is from three to six years of age. As a general proposition, keep the ewe as long as the teeth remain good and she is producing lambs regularly.

Of course, if sheep are kept continuously on the same pasture, they are liable to stomach-worm infection, but such infection more often proves serious in the case of young lambs than with older sheep.

MOONLIGHT SCHOOL PRIZE DRINK HABIT GOES

Hart County Teacher Rewarded For Redeeming 75 Illiterates.

Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 22.—The state prize for the best moonlight school has been awarded to R. E. Jagers, a rural school teacher in Hart county. Mr. Jagers enrolled 228 students in his moonlight school, taught six weeks and redeemed 75 illiterates. He is to be honored with a trip to Washington City as a guest of Senator Beckham and Kentucky's congressmen. He will be presented to the president by Senator James, and will be the recipient of many honors. Mr. Jagers says that he has greatly enjoyed teaching the moonlight school and that it has improved his day school attendance and aroused his community to better things.

The teachers who stood highest in the contest with Mr. Jagers were: Grover Sizemore, of Leslie county; F. H. Spiceland, of Calloway county and Miss Nell Caldwell, of Hardin county.

This is the third year in succession the Western Kentucky has won the state prize for moonlight schools.

Capt. A. Sartoris.

Algernon Sartoris, grandson of Ulysses S. Grant has enlisted in the Foreign Legion and is now training at Lavellebonne.

Algernon Sartoris is the son of Nellie Grant Sartoris and nephew of General Frederick Dent Grant. He is forty-two years old. In the Spanish-American war Sartoris saw active service in the Philippines, and rose from lieutenant to captain. In 1908 he was appointed, chiefly through the good offices of Theodore Roosevelt, secretary to the American Legation in Guatemala. This post he relinquished after a year's service. He married, in 1904, Mlle. Germaine Cecil Noufflard, of Paris.

THE BEST MAN WINS

By SUSAN E. CLAGETT.

"You have heard of the place paved with good intentions, Pauline, dear. I am afraid many bricks are laid to my credit, for my intentions are always good but fall of accomplishment. I mean to write, but somehow never do. This time you must forgive me, for I am most unhappy. And my unhappiness came from out a clear sky. Since then I have sounded the depths. Father is obdurate. Mother sides with him.

"It is nothing but pig-headed obstinacy in father. Anyone looking at Howard would know he is a gentleman. He certainly is good to look at, and, of course, I think the sun rises and sets in him. But father will not listen when I tell him we are engaged. He merely says: 'When you care for a man, Jane, you can marry him as soon as he asks you, but so long as I live a make-believe one shall never have you.'

"July 10th—I thought my letter had reached you but have just found it in my portfolio. When I wrote a month ago I thought myself encompassed by misery, but my feelings were as nothing to what they have been the past few days.

"Father told me I must break off my engagement; that I should not see Howard again. I stormed. He merely said, 'Jane, put on your hat and take a drive with your mother and me.' That was all.

"I told myself I wouldn't. But I had never disobeyed father in my life and we started on that drive. It was a long one. It took us three days to reach this place; a little farm at the end of nowhere, thirty miles from the nearest railroad station! There is no post office, no telephone, no car!

"July 20th—Pauline, dear, it is a comfort to chat with you, even if my letter has to wait forever and forever to reach the office. I do get so hungry for home news. Mother has written once, but not a word from dad, which shows plainly that I am still in disgrace. Today Peter told me he might go to the station for mail. If he didn't, he thought Dan Isham would take my letters. Whoever is Dan Isham? I haven't seen a man, except Peter, since father left me here. I wonder if he is as old and wrinkled as Peter."

"July 21st—He came before I had finished my letter. Just an ordinary, farmer sort of person. He has nice eyes. I saw that, although he turned them away at once. I wonder what he thought of me?

"August 10th—I am seeing a good deal of Dan Isham. He lives on the next place, wherever that is.

"He isn't a bit like Howard, but he knows where to find the loveliest wood flowers, and this morning showed me the cutest little open-mouthed baby birds; mocking birds, he said they were.

August 24th—Dan came this morning and asked me to walk to King's Creek with him. I don't know what got into me, but I felt I must talk of Howard. I told of our engagement, and how determined father is that it shall be broken off, but that I was determined to marry him when I came of age.

"And when will that be?" he asked. "Your appearance this morning suggests nothing so much as that of a pretty spoiled child of twelve."

"Spoiled child?" I gasped. I could not control my voice, so I turned my back on him. As I did so I caught sight of something that turned me cold with fright. Coming toward us with lowered head was a great black bull. "With a shuddering sob I caught hold of Dan and hid my face against his shoulder.

"Why, child?" Then the low mutter of that awful animal made him turn suddenly. Will you believe me, Pauline, Dan Isham laughed, but he didn't let me go. He put his hand under my chin and made me look at him. What he saw in my eyes I do not know. What I saw in his made me again hide my face against that old, faded blue shirt. Even through my fear I was glad father had told Howard Chandler I should not marry him.

"I did not mind Dan's laughing, there was such comfort in feeling his arms about me, but for propriety's sake I tried to slip from them, when he said:

"Jane, that steer is one of Peter's ox team, and is as gentle as a lamb. Truly I am thankful he put in an appearance just now, for I have been wondering ever since you began talking of Chandler, how long I would have to wait before you found out you loved me instead. For you do love me. There is no question about my feeling for you. I surrendered the first time I saw you."

"When we at last reached the house whom should we find but father, and he shook Dan's hand as if he had known him all his life. It seems Dan had studied law in the office and had been associated more or less with dad ever since. I don't know why I had never met him. It just happened so, I suppose.

"Of course, Dan didn't rest until he had told father about ourselves. When he finished, dad looked at me with a twinkle in his eyes that made me suspicious, but he said very solemnly: 'You can have her, Dan. You surely are a man after my own heart.'

"I wonder, Pauline. I wonder. Do you think dad could have had this in mind when he left me thirty miles from a post office?"
